Says French Worked to Last
for Peace and Puts All Blame on Kaiser.

Special Correspondence to THE SUN.

PARIS, Aug. 25.—To find a counterpart for the scene of frenzied enthusiasm in the French Chamber to-day, when the state of war with Germany was formally placed before the nation, one would have to go back to that other August 4 a century and a quarter ago when the old regime gave its last gasp, when the aristocrats, the bourgeois, the priests made the sacrifice of their privileges on the altar of the fatherland, when feudalism, the Church and the Third Estate merged in one nation, with one hope, founded on a common basis, human liberty.

Party lines disappeared this afternoon. Beginning with a universal tribute to Jaures, the Socialist leader who fell a victim to his work for peace on the eve of the outbreak of war, the spirit of the deputies, representing republicanism and monarchism, socialism and conservatism, was expressed in the one cry:

"Il n'y a plus que des Français." (There are none now but Frenchmen.)

The message of President Poincaré to the nation, reciting the causes of the war and the reasons on which the French attitude is based, was interrupted by wild outbursts of applause. The message, read by Premier Viviani, was as follows:

"France has just been the object of a brutal and premeditated aggression which is an insolent defiance of the right of nations. Before a declaration of war had been addressed to us, even before the German Ambassador had demanded his passports, our national territory has been invaded.

"For more than forty years France, in a sincere desire for peace, has buried in the depths of her heart the desire for legitimate reparation.

"Since the German ultimatum brought about a crisis menacing all Europe France has limited herself to recommending a policy of prudence, wisdom and moderation.

"Not one act, not one movement, not one word which was not pacific and conciliating can be attributed to France.

"In the hour of the first battle France has done herself the justice of saying solemnly that she has, to the last moment, made supreme efforts to avert the war which has just started and the responsibility for which Germany will have to bear the crushing responsibility before history.

"The President of the republic, interpreter of the entire country, expresses to our troops on land and sea the admiration and the confidence of all France."

(This statement, which was accepted as a recognition by the President that the expectation of direct action from France on which the Germans are known to have based great hope, in view of the recent socialist triumph, was vain, provoked a general outburst of applause. The Premier, M. Viviani, was forced to suspend the reading of the document for several minutes. He continued:

"Cloosely united in the sentiment the French nation will persevere in the struggle which it has displayed since the beginning of the crisis and of which it has given a daily proof.

"In the war which is opening, France will have on her side the right, and peoples, not less than individuals, cannot with impunity disdain the eternal moral strength of right."

"She is ally seconded by Russia, her ally."

"At these words the eyes of all the deputies were turned on M. Iskovsky, the Russian Ambassador, who sat in the diplomatic gallery, and cries of "Vive la Russie!" resounded through the chamber. A single outburst, with shouts of "Vive l'Angleterre!" and the words of the President's message.

"She is supported by the loyal friendship of England."

"And around were the closing words of the message, 'from all points of the civilized world vows of sympathy are coming for France. She represents to-day, once again, before the universe, liberty, justice, right."

"Hearts high and vive la France!"

Premier Viviani's Speech.

When the deputies resumed their seats after cheering M. Poincaré's message for fully five minutes, Premier Viviani began the reading of the official declaration regarding the war.

"The German Ambassador," he said, "left Paris yesterday after having notified us of the state of war. The Government of the Reich has declared that it is in a state of war with France and that it has declared the German Republic to be in a state of war with France."

"This announcement was aggravated by the fact that on Friday, July 24, the
